

NEWS

BUSINESS

SPORTS

WEATHER

CONSUMERS

ARTSCANADA

KIDS

FORUMS

CBC ARCHIVES

ON-AIR GUIDE

ABOUT CBC

CONTACT US

SHOPS & SERVICES

CBC CORPORATE

RADIO-CANADA

PRIVACY

copyright © CBC 2002

All rights reserved

'Persistent poverty' affecting Canadian children

Last Updated Mon, 04 Nov 2002 20:50:48

OTTAWA - The Canadian Council on Social Development released a grim report Monday that details societal damage done by child poverty and what the council calls "persistent poverty."

Although the number of children without enough to eat has decreased slightly, the new study says families in need are having more trouble escaping from poverty.

- INDEPTH: Measuring Poverty

The council's sixth annual Progress of Canada's Children suggests child poverty is deeper and more entrenched in Canadian society.

The report says children in families described as "persistently poor" tend not to be as healthy as other children. Children in poor families do not do as well in school as other children.

Other points:

- Children living in poverty are three times more likely to have a parent suffering from depression.
- Some 300,000 children in Canada rely on food banks every month.
- Children in poor families are much more likely to become runaways.
- Children growing up in poverty are more likely to become foster children.
- Between 1984 and 1999, the average net wealth of the top 20 per cent of couples with children increased by 43 per cent. For families at the bottom of the income scale, net wealth fell by more than 51 per cent.
- Children living in persistent poverty are twice as likely to live in dysfunctional families, and twice as likely to live with violence.

"When we look at the depth

CHOOSE YOUR MEDIA

VIDEO: Carolyn Dunn reports for CBC TV (Runs 2:18)

Download Player

News conference releases child poverty. (Runs 3:03)

EXTERNAL LINKS

- Canadian Council on S Development

(Note: CBC does not endorse responsible for the content of - links will open in new window)

YOUR TURN

WRITE TO US:
Send your comments to letter

JOIN THE DISCUSSION:
Share your thoughts on this a news stories!

Email This Story

Printable Version

of poverty... those numbers aren't going down in a significant way, so kids are really poor," said Louise Hanvey, who wrote the report.

In Montreal, the numbers of needy are increasing, said youth worker Tommy Kulczyk.

There are already 1,000 more families signed up for a Christmas hamper this year than last, and two-thirds of them have children under 12, he said.

The report says children who live in communities with plentiful resources – parks, libraries – score better on tests of physical, emotional, social and intellectual development.

In the case of poor children, the opposite is the case. The report cites a study in Edmonton that says poor children worry more about the safety of their neighbourhoods than about lack of food.

"Despite the economic boom of the mid- to late-1990s, too many Canadian families and their children are barely scraping by and are just one problem away from economic disaster," Hanvey said.

"The fact that so many kids are heading off to school on empty stomachs is not the reality one expects to see in a G-7 country like Canada that is consistently ranked among the best places in the world in which to live."

Written by CBC News Online staff

Headlines: Canada

- Liberal backbenchers, opposition force procedural change
- Privacy commissioner wants birthplace info removed from Canadian passports
- Provincial justice ministers want action on new pornography law
- Canadians want Ottawa, provinces to get together on Kyoto: poll
- Moncton hospital to stop abortions
- Tory leadership boycott would unite right: Harris
- Ontario premier hints election may be later rather than sooner
- Austin Clarke wins Giller Prize